34 - In your opinion, what are the three best features of this course?

Response Rate	15/16 (93.75%)

• 1. The fact that the class is mainly based on student input makes it much more relatable and adaptable for students. 2. Subject matter is related to real life events and coursework can lead to real life conversations/solutions. 3. Very conversation-focused. I find that these talks help breakdown the readings and topics and fill in any blanks in my understanding.

• The readings and in-class discussions were excellent. I loved all of the topics we covered in the readings and they all gave me important context surrounding the current technology and information landscape. In-class discussions were great and I enjoyed hearing how the readings impacted my fellow students. I also enjoyed how Professor Calado let us lead the discussions and create our own discussion questions!

• the professor is very knowledgeable and makes the content interesting, the assigned reading are interesting pieces i wouldn't have otherwise found, the discussions are stimulating and cover interesting and relevant topics

• - Discussion - I'm interested in what my classmates have to say - Subject matter - relevant readings - Personal rapport w/ instructor

• Flexibility based on subject interest, manageable homework load, interesting course materials provided.

• -The instructor's enthusiasm for course material -The class was accessible yet also challenging -I learned a lot about writing and thinking about critical theory

• The diverse readings, discussions about the readings, and the professor :)

• classroom environment peer reviews for final paper

• The ice breakers at the beginning of class. As a first semester student it was nice to at least know the names of other students in the class. The diverse readings and # of readings per week. I enjoyed how the readings varied in difficulty. The field work assignments, motivated me to interact more with my field.

• The readings were fantastic and very interesting. The assignments were well paced throughout the semester and I never felt overwhelmed by the work load. I really liked the required drafts for the final project as it really helped with my time management. I also really liked the weekly introductions as I think it really does help make people more comfortable with contributing to discussions.

• The interesting and wide-ranging readings, the professor's writing tips, and the class discussions.

• 1. The care and thoughtfulness of our professor with the structure of the syllabus being mindful not to assign reading on a week when we had to submit a major assignment. 2. The group discussions and free-write portion of the class prior to the class-wide discussion which allows students time and strategy for contributing to the conversation with talking points. 3. Devoting class time for working on assignments, peer-review and offering the one on one meetings to check on our progress with the final project. Bonus: the fun ice breakers at the start of every class to create a welcoming environment for the introverts of the class like myself.

• Having a class with students outside of my specific degree track was really helpful. It broadened my perspective, and helped me build a base of understanding for parts of information studies I have less familiarity with. The readings for this course were excellent. I will want to continue to read many of the writers we interacted with in this class. I honestly can't imagine a better class to have taken in the winter of 2025. The readings were not only applicable to the course but really helped me understand the current climate better. Professor Calado built a rapport with us, and helped us build a rapport with each other. We were engaged in the topics, but also speaking with each other on a human to human level. I don't feel like I got to know my classmates as well in any other course I took this semester, and I have a lot of respect for the brains I was able to learn with this sprint.

• I really enjoyed the seminar style class, the introductions every week, and when Professor Calado would show us something cool or related to something we were talking about.

• course content/readings chosen professor did a really great job "prepping" us for "how to do grad school" gave us time IN class to work on larger assignments, made sure we are/were preparing properly

35 - In your opinion, what three changes would most improve this course?

Response Rate	15/16 (93.75%)

• can't really think of anything... maybe it should be held in a different room, better suited for conversations? a lot of the students agreed that it felt like a roundtable discussion, so maybe a place with an actual round table or opportunity to rearrange seating to make it better to talk amongst the class.

• I really only have one suggestion, which would be to have more discussion or exercises about applying what we learned to our respective fields as information professionals.

• no notes

• - Too easy - a month of hand holding for a 2000 word paper for a graduate level course, class time wasted consistently - Readings don't culminate into any sort of test other than participation based discussion posts - Instructor doesn't trust students to absorb the material - doesn't allow students to challenge themselves

• Maybe a couple more readings assigned per class to flesh out the discussion board posts.

• -slightly more structure during class: I would have liked to break into small groups with people outside of the area I was sitting -more activities rather than discussion (maybe this is just my personal preference) -just two!

• n/a

• more attention to concrete principles of information before critical discourse -- example, "informatics" was on the syllabus and we never talked about what that actually means less like a literature class less time spent discussing the readings in class, or a different structure to those discussions

• I enjoyed the diverse readings, but would have liked more difficult readings too. I think the discussion posts should be used during lecture discussions. I'm not sure how feasible this would be but more group work or interactions with people who aren't sitting next to you.

• I wish some of the guidelines for assignments were a bit clearly in what was expected, especially with the final paper as there were certain technical elements that were a little confusing (number of sources, what the goal of comparing the two sources were). Other than that I can't really think of any other critiques or changes I would make!

• It would be great to have the concept of the final paper be explained more in depth, maybe with example papers or theses -- it's a good prompt, but it's a little unusual and took us all a little while to wrap our heads around what was expected, I think.

• 1. Having the library visit closer to the start of the semester so that when the first project is due, students are already aware of the library's resources.

• The class notes are a good feature, but I think the way they are added can be tweaked. I think sometimes Professor Calado would help revise the statements students were making as a writing exercise, but I think that editing/refining the thought could have been done more through questions or felt a little more like a dialogue than a revision, because sometimes it felt like the thought changed from when it was spoken to when it was put in the notes. I also think, because it was an evening class and we were all tired, sitting and watching the professor type as we were talking felt like it slowed us down. I really appreciate the way Professor Calado used the final paper to help us practice working on research based writing at a graduate level, and I think some of that work could be incorporated into the way the discussion posts factor into the semester. No other notes, this course was pretty solid.

• the time :(it's hard to do a seminar style class late at night

• Hardest thing about the course was the time of it! lol but that has nothing to do with the actual course

• Professor Calado is my fave professor so far! I hope to take more of their classes during my time here at Pratt :) Also this course is amazing and really opened my eyes to a lot. I can see myself using what I learned from here in future courses and in my own life.

• Professor Calado is excellent and always brings important and thoughtful questions to class discussions. She is also very personable and funny, which made for a welcoming classroom environment! I thoroughly enjoyed her class and am hoping to enroll in another in a future semester.

• Prof. Calado is a super kind, personable professor with lots of knowledge about the course material. She is super helpful when offering feedback and explaining the course content.

• Thank you!

• I've recommended Professor Calado to other students interested in her class. I really enjoyed the class format.

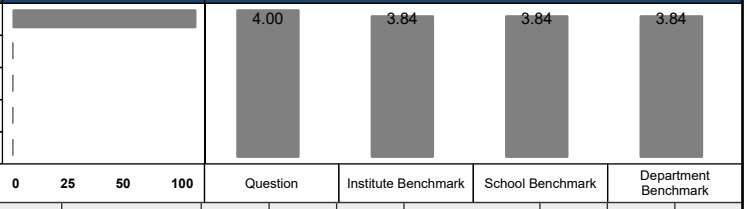

• Prof Calado is a really amazing professor! She picked out great readings for us -- I loved the strategy of assigning just the first chapter of a longer book, I got a lot of great reading recommendations out of that. She also facilitated really interesting class discussions and writing exercises.

• I really appreciated how Professor Calado was so considerate of students' needs and was mindful of the workload each week. I also liked that there was a google doc where the class notes were kept for reference. It especially helped to understand the readings better. I thought the flow of the class discussions was always so carefully thought out with starting the process with the free-write activity, then sharing in small groups, then sharing with the class at large. And I also enjoyed the conversational type of exchange between Professor Calado and us students that helped put me at ease. Some of the class readings yielded very insightful conversations and inspired me to share my thoughts more than usual.

• Thank you again! I really appreciated this course, and will miss the dynamic and discussions our class had.
