Course: Program For Cultural Heritage - 24/FA-INFO-664-02

Instructor: Filipa Calado *

Response Rate: 4/9 (44.44 %)

34 - In your opinion, what are the three best features of this course?

Response Rate	4/9 (44.44%)

• 1. Overall a good introduction to the programming language; 2. the subject of the course has wide application, so students were able to design a wide-range of final projects; 3. the hands-on approach made class time more productive and enjoyable.

• The in-class instruction was easy to follow and having access to the notebooks was very helpful for completing the homework assignments after class. The discussions on ethics and sustainability were eye-opening as I never considered the ethics of coding and obtaining data from websites. I enjoyed having the option to do homework at the end of class while everything was still fresh in my mind.

• There were many great things about this course and Prof. Calado was a highly effective, approachable and empathic guide to a subject that can be very intimidating and obscure to a new coder. Aside from Info Tech, I'd never done any coding before and was not familiar at all with Python. Honestly, the only reason I took this course was because my advisor recommended it. The impression I had from other students I talked to before this semester was that this was a scary course. So I entered with trepidation, but within a few classes Prof. Calado created an environment that made me feel at ease as a beginner. That leads to another great feature of the course, which was that it was very focused on Python and a few key related skills, enabling the time to learn them all more thoroughly. This was a very different experience than I had with my 2 previous tech courses, both of which covered a lot more topics. In those other classes, it was a constant struggle not to fall behind every week, and it felt like there was never enough time absorb most of what we were learning. In this course, we went more slowly and were allowed to build skills more gradually. It seemed like Prof. Calado took the time to get to know our comfort levels with coding, and paid close attention to what parts of the curriculum students were struggling with. While still a beginner, I leave the class with a strong foundation in Python, webscraping and Pandas, and eager to dive deeper into these areas! Related to all of the above are the qualities of Prof. Calado herself. Python, APIs, machine learning, dataframes and Pandas are all complex subjects, so I appreciated the clarity of her explanations, and that she was always willing to take the time to answer questions fully rather than simply moving through the lesson. I feel she delved deeply enough into the subjects we covered without going too far (or not far enough) given the level of the class. She also created a fun atmosphere in which students could get to know her better as well as one another. I also loved that she was very invested in our projects and that the course design gave me the chance to develop my project over time. The "over time" part is especially relevant for Python, because my project certainly involved many roadblocks and I spent a lot of time dealing with errors and things that turned out to be harder than expected. I relied a lot on her help, and she always made herself available. This led to a project that reflects my deeper interests and will certainly be in my portfolio (and one I plan to continue beyond class).

• Professor Calado is great at explaining the nuance and the granular Why of the coding concepts she teaches. The assignments are structured in a way that makes it easy to adapt the skills your learning to your unique set of interests.

35 - In your opinion, what three changes would most improve this course?

Response Rate	4/9 (44.44%)

• I have no changes. The course accomplished exactly what it stated it would.

• No changes this was my favorite class this semester.

• I don't have too much to suggest here, except to second what another student said towards the beginning of the semester. The student asked if we were going to have readings or other materials that would address ethical issues in coding, AI and other tech topics. We did have ethical discussions organically in classes as students had questions or Prof. Calado raised issues. That said, it might not hurt to have some readings or other materials (not sure what would be best) to help students think about the social dimensions of the skills they're learning. Such as misogyny or gender gaps in the coding communities and tech in general. Or the racial biases built into LLMs.

• Nothing comes to mind

• She's truly an exceptional instructor and I'd love to take another class with her! Also really appreciate the online tutorials she created, which will be a resource for me to refer back to.

• I had a lot of fun in this class! It was one of my favorite courses throughout my time here at Pratt.

37 - This course supports diversity, equity and inclusion.
