34 - In your opinion, what are the three best features of this course?

• The professor did a great job teaching people with various levels of experience coding. The kinds of projects students worked on were very interesting and creative. This course encouraged building problem-solving skills and asking questions.

• 1. Prof. Calado was well-prepared and very organized. She also crated a Jupyter Book documenting in details every topic covered in every class for those of us who want to review the material or use it for future reference. 2. Prof. Calado explained the material to students very clearly and patiently. Even though students were of different levels in terms of programming skills, each of us encountered problems of different difficulties and Prof. Calado worked with each one of us to debug codes and overcome roadblocks. 3. Some final projects of my classmates were so interesting and high quality! It is all thanks to Prof. Calado who gave us the flexibility to choose our own topics and pursue our research interests, as well as doing everything she could to help us complete out final projects to a level we could be happy with, no matter what our topics were!

• Learning how to code, learning how to develop projects and do text analysis. Professor Calado was very encouraging on my projects and gave me valuable feedback and helped direct my interests productively and was helpful to talk to for working on ideas.

• Flexibility in project topic and scope, good feedback, fair grades

• I appreciated the chance to openly discuss code/AI/programming during class and one on one with the professor, learning about a large breadth of uses for code in personal work/research, and having a final where we could be creative and pursue a personal interest.

• It might've been helpful for there to be more office hours. More time to develop ideas for the final project. No third change.

• 1. If the classes on OpenRefine and the (optional) Github static page could be moved up one week, it would have given us more time to prepare for the final presentation on a Github page (which was not required but nonetheless very helpful and gratifying to learn!). Although I do understand that the guest lecturer on OpenRefine did his best to arrange his schedule and OpenRefine was a very useful tool for us to learn, so I appreciate all the effort that went into arranging this guest lecture! 2. I found one classmate's behavior in class a little disturbing and disruptive. She wore big headphones in class the entire time in this course, even during her own presentation! This would have been fine if she kept things to herself, but when other students took turns telling the class about our projects, she laughed so loudly from whatever she was watching on her laptop, totally ignoring whatever was going on in class and how disrespectful her behavior was to others presenting. When she had issues following the professor's clear instructions on Python coding, she did not think twice to stop the class and demand the professor to help her right away. If the whole class had to wait around while the professor helped her, then the least she could do was to show some respect and kept whatever she was watching in class to herself, while the rest of us shared our projects with others in accordance with the class plan. To be fair though, I don't know if this situation could be helped, because I myself didn't know an appropriate way to tell her, as a classmate, how I felt about her behavior in class, so I kept quiet the whole term.

• It's hard to say the course was great this was one of the best course I've taken at Pratt

• Time spent on static sites earlier in the semester

• More group work in class to teach/learn from other students.

• This was by far the most useful and relevant class I took this semester, thanks to Prof. Calado's well thought-out and well executed course plan, which was packed with many practical tools that I could use for my research not only for this course but also going forward! This course assumed no prior knowledge of Python, APIs, web scraping, etc., so it started with the most basic and essential elements of each covered topic. And yet Prof. Calado helped each student individually to develop his/her final project to such great depth that many of the finished products were so interesting and impressive! I've already recommended Prof. Calado's section to several students who need or want to learn Python next semester but are not confident about their coding skills. If there is an Excellence in Teaching Award at Pratt, I would like to nominate Prof. Calado!

• The professor was supportive when I had some difficulties during the semester. I'm glad I stuck with it I learned a lot and want to develop the work I did in the class further
